

No 5 Vicars' Hill

Access Guide

Background to No.5 Vicars' Hill

No 5 is a short walk from the Library, opposite St Patrick's Cathedral. From the outside No 5 looks no different from the houses on either side. However, its small hallway opens into two beautiful, octagonal rooms with vaulted ceilings.

Archbishop Robinson built No 5 as the Registry to hold Church of Ireland and civil records. In 2011 the Library restored No 5 to exhibit examples of the Library's collections, such as Roman and Medieval coins, Neolithic stone tools, Bronze Age weapons, Irish hand bells and eighteenth-century fine art.

Rare survivals of eighteenth-century fine art include James Tassie's 'gems' from the 1770s. Tassie reproduced classical figures in a hard-setting sulphur paste. Collectors of his 'gems' included Russia's Catherine the Great, while Louis XIV of France commissioned medals to commemorate his reign. You can see some very rare casts of these medals, made in about 1690 from originals in the Paris mint. In addition, a number of Hogarth's satirical engravings from the Library's internationally important print collection are on display.

Car Parking

Visitors are welcome to park in the grounds of St Patrick's Church of Ireland Cathedral which is very close to the Library and No 5.

Your Arrival

There is a ramp up to the entrance of the building at No 5. For those who may have difficulty moving over the kerb onto the ramp, we have a small portable ramp which can be positioned between the two on request.

You will walk through an open door and down a corridor to the reception.

You will be welcomed by a staff member at the reception. The staff member wears a badge to make them easy to distinguish.

Turning right at the reception you will see an alcove which joins the two main rooms of the museum.

Toilet Facilities

If you turn right at the reception and walk through the alcove, there are toilet facilities through the door in front of you.

Robinson Room

Towards the back of the building is the Robinson Room.

Balcony

In the Robinson Room, there is a door which leads to a balcony.

Registry Room

Walking straight from the Robinson room, up two steps, is the Beresford room. If you do not wish to take the steps you can go back out into the entrance hall and turn left through a doorway into the Registry Room. The Registry Room has some examples of records on display. Most of the records which were originally held here are now in the Public Records Office in Belfast.

The Library and No 5 are closed on Bank Holidays, Morning/Afternoon on the Hill group visits and special events.

Please check the calendar on our website for special closures before making your journey!

We hope you enjoy your visit to No.5 Vicars' Hill!
